I served as an official in five US Presidential Administrations and observed first hand the very significant role the legal bar had on US policy with virtually no input from the legislative or executive branches of government. I worked for a number of years with academicians, a very few of which agreed with me, to bring this matter to the Deans of law schools but with no success. The purpose of this paper is to enjoin a debate on this topic. https://www.thecre.com/ombpapers/OMB\_Officials.htm ... Read More

Thank you for inviting me to this discussion. I consider its topics very important in our day and age. I have been researching for several years so far the absolute attorney monopoly established in the U.S. over the last century and the emerging (under the guidance of the ABA, I must say) attorney monopoly in my native Russia. The first problem with the "bar and bench" monopoly in the United States that I see is detachment of the public from the topic of attorney regulation as obscure and u... Read More

This issue exists almost solely because we do not increase the number of representatives in Congress. We froze that number at 435 in the House and 100 in the US Senate. Both of those numbers can and should increase. The fact that it does not is what creates that "Administrative State" and how it continues to grow and will continue to grow. When the number of representatives does not grow, the act of delegating the law making authority goes up. Congress simply cannot both oversee the executive a... Read More

Judging by what Representatives in Congress do for publicity, they have plenty of time, and we do not need more of the same.

Administrative Conference of the United States We are very surprised with both the number of participants and visitors to this forum in its less than one week of operation. This degree of public participation is a result in large part of our choice of Academia.edu as the modus operandi for taking this message to interested stakeholders; Academia.edu has 166 million registered users. The judicious solution to the issue we have raised herein will not occur immediately but instead take place in ... Read More

A Major News Organization Reports on the Issue Identified in this Forum Inside EPA, a well known and well respected environmental news organization based in Washington, DC , has issued a detailed report on the controversy set forth in this forum. The encyclopedic article is available at <https://www.thecre.com/insurance/?p=3807> It should be noted that the noted administrative law scholar Richard Pierce identified serious shortcomings in a legal doctrine central to this discussion. His in-dept... Read More

I am not sure of it was the academia.edu algorithms that suggested I review this paper or if the author chose me: whichever, I'm a confused as to why it is being presented as a paper for review on this forum. Although the stated purpose is to enjoin debate on the subject, that's very difficult to do meaningfully when the paper is just an assertion of the authors opinion on how legal doctrine wrt the administrative state is developed, and a solicitation for recommendations on institutions suitabl... Good points on however Academia is selecting "letters" and discussants. I have also been puzzled by invitations to offer comments on pieces that are clearly not research (or if so, violate most evidentiary rules), meaning that I have no idea about the basis on which I am expected to comment. Plus there is the occasional question as to whether the piece should be published -- but where? Most of what I am sent is either a sort of literature review posing as research or what might be considered ... Read More
